Executive Summary

This white paper was developed by the RxLogic team as an industry resource. Readers will gain a better understanding of a modern, transparent and data-driven approach to rebate administration that is designed to help organizations improve clarity and control, reduce net drug costs and ensure rebate dollars reach their intended destination.

Rebate administration remains one of the most opaque and frustrating areas of pharmacy benefit management. Some legacy rebate models can create unnecessary financial risk and limit the ability to forecast, underwrite or optimize long-term savings. The result is often misalignment between rebate revenue and plan strategy, creating pressure on client and stakeholder trust.

Today's pharmacy benefit stakeholders -- across PBMs, TPAs, self-insured employers, hospice -- need insight-driven tools that bring visibility, strategic flexibility and integration across the full rebate lifecycle.

Learn how a platform that enables real-time, claim-level tracking and supports customized rebate strategies can unlock hidden value while improving accountability. Recent regulatory developments are also increasing the urgency for transparency in pharmacy benefit operations. Federal initiatives, including enhanced reporting and rebate pass-through expectations under the Consolidated Appropriations Act (CAA 2026), are placing greater emphasis on auditability, fiduciary accountability and the ability to validate financial outcomes at the claim level. As oversight expands, organizations are seeking technology infrastructure that embeds transparency directly into operational workflows rather than relying on retrospective reporting.

I. Discover the Advantages and Core Capabilities: Transparent, Client-Centric Rebate Administration

The right rebate platform removes guesswork and gives organizations full visibility into each stage of the rebate lifecycle, from submission and reconciliation to audit and payment.

Rather than relying on rigid, pre-set structures, this approach supports strategy-aligned rebate programs that reflect each organization's benefit design, financial goals and risk profile.

Key stakeholders that benefit from this approach include:

- Pharmacy Benefit Managers (PBMs)
- Health Plans and TPAs
- Self-Insured Employers
- Hospice and Long-Term Care Providers
- Workers' Compensation and Commercial Lines

Look for the Following Capabilities as Exemplified by the RxLogic Technology Platform

Pass-Through Rebate Data

Every data point, submission, rejection, receipt and payment, is logged and time-stamped. End-to-end transparency improves forecasting, streamlines operations and supports accountability.

Vendor-Agnostic, Multi-Partner Model

The most adaptable platforms support integration with multiple vendors, without restricting clients to a single provider, ensuring interoperability and data consistency.

Audit-Ready Reporting

Rebate tools should enable clients to validate that claims adjudicate accurately in accordance with plan descriptions and contract terms, essential for both internal controls and regulatory audits.

Flexible Financial Models

A strong rebate platform offers flexibility in how financial models are structured, allowing organizations to align their approach with broader business goals. Whether opting for straightforward pass-through arrangements, securing minimum guarantees or implementing underwriting-based strategies, the platform should support customization at every level.

These models can be tailored to reflect an organization's risk tolerance, market position and long-term financial objectives, ensuring that rebate programs are both sustainable and strategically sound.

II. Closing the Gap Where Traditional Aggregators Fall Short

Many legacy rebate aggregators often rely on black-box systems that obscure data, limit flexibility and delay execution. This can lead to:

- Inflated net drug costs.
- Misaligned incentives.
- Operational bottlenecks.
- Frustrated stakeholders.

Platforms that prioritize transparency, real-time integration and strategic customization offer a smarter path forward. Organizations gain visibility across the rebate process, from claim to payment and ensure that rebate strategy aligns with broader business objectives.

Secure, Compliant and Scalable Infrastructure

Modern platforms must meet high standards for reliability, integration and compliance. Look for a SaaS-based solution that offers:

- Role-based access and audit trails for regulatory readiness.
- API-first architecture for connecting adjudication engines, eligibility feeds, EHR systems and CRM tools.
- HIPAA and SOC II compliance to protect patient and plan data.
- Fully auditable workflows that demonstrate internal, state and federal compliance.
- CMS “Friends of the Ecosystem” early adopter recognition, showing leadership in healthcare technology innovation and collaboration.
- Surescripts certification across key services, ensuring trusted interoperability and secure, real-time exchange of prescribing and benefit information.

Next-Gen Features Driving Better Rebate Outcomes

Rebate platforms should evolve with client needs. Emerging capabilities include:

- Real-Time Claims Adjudication: Captures rebate eligibility at the moment of transaction.
- Formulary and Plan Management: Aligns drug tiers and access logic to rebate strategy.
- Integrated Financial Workflows: Streamlines invoicing, receivables and reconciliation.
- Advanced Analytics: Provides dashboards and reports for data-driven decisions.
- Network MarketPlace Integration: Enables rebate-linked coordination with copay, voucher and discount card programs.

III. Built for Multiple Stakeholders

Rebate administration should support a wide range of organizations and benefit structures, including:

- PBMs and Pharmacy Benefit Administrators
- Health Plans and TPAs
- Self-Insured Employers
- Hospice and LTC Providers
- Workers' Compensation Plans

The right solution adapts to any sector, ensuring compliance, cost control and efficiency.

Your Rebates. Your Rules. Real Results.

Rebate Administration plays a central role in overall pharmacy benefit performance. It demands more than transactional processing, it requires visibility, flexibility and tools aligned to your organization's strategy.

Platforms that offer claim-level insight, adaptable rebate structures and audit-ready control empower plans to reduce costs, improve accuracy and optimize rebate value with confidence.

A modern, transparent and data-driven approach to rebate administration gives pharmacy benefit stakeholders the clarity and claim-level insight needed to improve accountability and ensure rebate dollars reach their intended destination.
